TRAGEDY BARES SUICIDE PACT OF NEWLY WED PAIR

Akron Bride and Groom Agree to Die Together as Result Of Longing for "Happier Land," and Swallow Poison—Found In Bed at Their Home

AKRON—(United Press.)—How the longing for a "happier land" drove a newly married couple into a suicide pact was revealed to authorities here today.

Locked in what was to be a last embrace, Mr. and Mrs. J. Bruce Chamberlain were found in bed at their rooming house. They had taken poison.

Chamberlain is dead. His wife, Beulah, is dying. Letters found in their room, police said, indicate the couple planned to die together, even before their marriage last September.

No it was given for their act except that they were going to a "happier land."

Before the marriage Mrs. Chamberlain was Beulah Rapp, of Bradford, Pa. Her father, a brother begged forgiveness for the act.

Mrs. Chamberlain was in high school at Bradford when she fell in love with Chamberlain, the letters showed. Her father opposed their marriage, so they eloped and came to Akron.

"MR. MARSHALL" IS SOUGHT

Wealthy Bostonian in Girl's Home Night of Tragedy

NEW YORK — (Associated Press) — The police today expected to question the mysterious "Mr. Marshall" who is generally supposed to have supplied the gilded wings with which Dorothy Kegan, known as Dorothy Klug, the model, flew as a gay butterfly thru Broadway to her tragic death.

Police Inspector Coughlin who is directing the murder investigation, was waiting for the appearance of "Mr. Marshall" and "Willson" his secretary, to explain their presence Wednesday night in the apartment where the girl's body was found Thursday.

"Mr. Marshall" is said to be a wealthy Bostonian, about 60 years old and engaged in the automobile tire business with offices in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

CLUES INVESTIGATED — While the girl's supposed benefactor may give helpful information, detectives were punning more faith in a man's small black pocket comb, encased in a leather sheath, which was found in her bed. They think it was dropped there by the man who administered the chloroform which caused the girl's death.

Another clue was furnished by the chloroform bottle, but the user had lessened its value by scratching off the serial number placed there for tracing the purchaser.

CHARGES AGAINST R. R. TRUBEY REVIVED; COURT COMMITTEE DEMANDS ACTION

Report Filed Saturday by Investigating Body

ACCUSATIONS ARE DETAILED

"Just What I've Been Demanding," Trubey Says

Recommendation that R. R. Trubey, assistant prosecuting attorney, be tried on charges of unprofessional conduct, involving moral turpitude, and for misconduct in office, were incorporated in the report of the court investigating committee filed Saturday.

The report covers the two charges and four separate specifications. The committee, Ira R. Longworth, chairman, George H. Quail and James J. Weidock, was appointed January 4 by Judge Fred C. Becker, with instructions to bring in a report and prosecute any charges they might find.

WHAT IS CHARGED

The accusations are:

Attempting to use his office to collect a fee of $750 from H. G. Russell, by threatening to prosecute him under an old and obsolete statute from Kalamazoo, Mich.

Alleged embezzlement of $500, left in his care as a bond by Sadie Morris, of Toledo.

Attempting to persuade Louis Morris to testify in his favor in the trial of the Morris case.

The alleged illegal retention of $500 belonging to Lee Clement, S. Malt-hotel man in connection with the Malt-Plumigan case.

"This is what I have been demanding of the committee for two months," Trubey declared when told of the charges. "I shall request an early hearing to settle the case, one way or another."

LIMA COMMERCE BOARD MANAGER WILL ATTEND BLUE SKY LAW PARLEY

Opinion of Better Business Bureau managers in Ohio of the new Blue Sky law now in the state legislature will be formulated at a conference to be held in Cleveland Monday, J. E. Morton, manager of the local bureau, will attend.

House bill 312, introduced by Representative Brown of Hancock, proposing several amendments to the present Blue Sky law, will be examined in detail and the collective opinion of the conference will be announced.

The present bill has strong points according to Morton, but in places it is confusing. Amendments intended to clarify some parts and strengthen others will be discussed.

Senate bill 271, the so-called "truth-in-fabric" bill, will also be studied. It is held by some that the law proposed in the bill cannot be enforced. It requires all violators and wool goods to be stamped with the percentage of virgin wool in the fabric. It is impossible to obtain convictions under this law, experts say, because there is no means of determining the percentage of virgin wool. It thus opens the way for extensive fraud, it is said.

AMERICAN DECLARES CZAR'S BONES AT RUSSIAN EMBASSY AT PEKING

DENVER — The bones of the former czar of Russia, and those of his family, executed by Bolsheviks, were spirited past "Red" sentries in Siberia by an American envoy two years ago and now repose in the old Russian legation in Peking.

This was the information given to the United Press by Arthur E. White, Denver, who has just returned from a tour of the Orient. White said he knew nothing of the report that the Czarovitch and Duke Michael are still living.

White, who is the son of an Arvada, Colo., banker, said he received his information from United States Consul Harris at Singapore. Harris, according to White's story, is the man who brought the bones into China.

"Mr. Harris told me of being at Ekaterinberg, Siberia, the scene of the former czar's execution, when he was American envoy to the Kolchak government," said White.

"A British army officer showed him a pit near a house where the czar, the czarina and their five children had been confined. This pit, so Harris told me, contained the bones of the Russian royal family. The British officer had explained."

"Harris said the officer requested him to convey the bones to the British embassy in Peking whence they were to be taken to the old Russian imperial embassy, to await a royal burial."

"Harris told me," continued White, "that the British officer located the Bolshevik captain of the firing squad which executed the members of the Russian royal family and obtained a deposition from him to the effect that the execution took place in the dead of night, at a time when the 'Red' garrison at Ekaterinberg feared the town would be captured by the Czech-Slovakian army."

BOARD OF COMMERCE PLANS HOUSEWARMING

FINAL BILL OF PHELPS-COBB CO.

"Sidelacked" is the title of the farwell offering presented by the Phelps-Cobb company as they end a three week engagement at the New Orpheum theatre today. Honey Gal and Buzz afford the audience many laughs as is their policy.

Each member of the company does a specialty introduced by Hazel Stanzel, the prima donna of the ensemble and each proves highly entertaining. Interpolated in the plot are many musical and vocal selections, as well as humorous incidents. The scenes and electrical effects are above the average and are representative of the highest class of vaudeville.

Beginning tomorrow Harrison's Big Revue will hold the Orpheum theatre for one week only. This is an entirely new comedy and has never played in Lima before.

WAR HERO POORLY REWARDED

Offers Self As Sacrifice To Yellow Fever Investigation

TOLEDO, O. — (Special) — Hopelessly crippled thru performance of one of the most heroic deeds of the Spanish-American War, John Kissinger, Honor, Mich., father of a family, is being rewarded by a grateful government.

At the rate of 39 cents a day! Kissinger didn't charge a machine-gun nest. He didn't capture a regiment of Spaniards single-handed. He didn't carry dispatches thru a rain of bullets.

All those things, heroic though they may be, are commonplace compared to the supreme deed of self-sacrifice performed by Kissinger.

For Kissinger submitted his body to army surgeons as a human research laboratory that they might discover a virus to halt the spread of yellow fever, a scourge more deadly than all the Spanish rifle balls, shrapnel, sabers and bayonets put together.

HE VOLUNTEERED

When the yellow fever plague was killing soldiers of the American expeditionary forces in Cuba like flies, the medical branch of the expedition asked for volunteers upon whom to try out their experimental virus.

Three volunteered. Kissinger was one.

The three heroes were inoculated with the germs of the dread malady. They went through suffering that has no parallel in Daniel's imagined torments of hell.

Two of the volunteers died under the strain. Kissinger came thru alive—but with his legs twisted and deformed and paralyzed.

He would have to crawl thru life on hands and knees until death freed him, physicians said and shook their heads gravely.

They Congress, in recognition of Kissinger's service, granted him an allowance of $1200 a year.

On that he managed for years to get along. But his family was growing. He needed more to feed his children.

Friends secured for him a $12-a-month pension in addition to his annuity.

Then suddenly Kissinger received a bill from a government clerk in Washington informing him he owed the government $1600.

Kissinger, the clerk explained, had been drawing his annuity illegally ever since he had started drawing his pension!

And the annuity was immediately $12 A MONTH.

Kissinger, though, continued to draw his $12 a month, on which he is expected to support his family, for his crippled condition precludes his performing any profitable work.

But Congressman Isaac Sherwood of Toledo, a veteran of the Civil War, has become interested in Kissinger's case. He'll introduce a special act at the next session of Congress to grant Kissinger an annuity.

Meanwhile a hero, perhaps the greatest of the Spanish-American War, must continue living on 39 cents a day!

GIRL TO TESTIFY AGAINST FATHER

Husband Accused of Slaying Wife in Brutal Manner

DECOY STARTS TRAGEDY

Child to be Star Witness Against Murderer of Mother

(BY GENE COHN)

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. — (Special) — The state is relying on the testimony of a nine-year-old girl to send her father to the gallows as the murderer of her mother.

That is the climax of a remarkable string of events growing out of a mysterious slaying which has marred this little seashore resort and which already is widely known as the "love-decoy murder."

The state knows these facts about the murder:

THAT Mrs. Elizabeth Masters, 42, mother of five children, was found brutally beaten to death in her bed.

THAT her husband, John H. Masters, real estate dealer, made a statement declaring his wife was slain by two burglars, because she screamed.

THAT Helen Masters, 9, declares: "I heard mama scream. I rushed to the room. Papa told me to wait a minute. I didn't. I saw papa rubbing blood from a pillow and wiping blood from his hands with a pillow."

"DECOY" THEORY

Now, from the known facts and from other evidence, investigators have uncovered, the prosecutor says, he hopes to prove.

THAT Masters killed his wife because he thought an attractive widow loved him. But—

THAT the widow didn't love him at all, that she flattered him only that she might arouse the jealousy of an eligible young bachelor and thus gain the bachelor's affections.

Hence the title of "love-decoy murder."

Mr. Della Stallman, says the prosecutor, is the widow in the case. She is almost in collapse over the tragic ending of her harmless prank.

This is the story as the prosecutor will try to reconstruct it at the trial.

Mr. Stallman said she had come to him. How shall she make him appreciate her loveliness? By jealousy, woman's age-old artifice!

She casts about for a decoy. She hits on Master whose business affairs bring him into contact with her. She'll just tell a little—and Coyne will be caught.

But Coyne, thinking the plot to be the trick of a young girl, goes to Mrs. Masters. She becomes furious. But things are patched up.

Then, in the next scene, the brutal murder of Mrs. Masters takes place. Did Master do it? Or did burglars, as he claims? A jury must decide that.

To aid them, they'll have not only the testimony of little Helen but that of the death room and state of her own person, which Masters says has been omitted when testified by the maid.

And experts will testify that a screen, alleged by Master to have been broken from the inside, really was broken from the inside.

Such is the drama that started in comedy and ended in blood.

VACCINATION DATES
BACK 2,000 YEARS

WASHINGTON — Smallpox vaccination, generally regarded as a modern practice, dates back more than 2,000 years, according to Dr. G. W. McCoy, director of the Hygienic Laboratory of the U. S. Public Health Service. Egyptologists may find vaccination marks on the mummy of the now famous King Tutankhamen.

"When the ancients noticed that recovery from the first attack gave immunity from others," said Dr. McCoy, "they began inoculating their fellows, first by exposing well persons to others ill with the disease and later by inoculation."

Jenner, who is generally conceded to have been the father of vaccination for smallpox with cowpox, only took vaccination on a rock where it would be impossible to get cowpox. McCoy, Records show that years before Jenner's time men had been vaccinated with cowpox and then with smallpox to demonstrate their immunity.

Dr. McCoy calls attention to the efficiency of the preventative with records of states and cities in the United States. Maryland where vaccination is nearly universal, has only one case in every ten thousand of her population, he said, with New York and the District of Columbia showing even a better average.

ANOTHER COLD
WAVE COMING

Ted is feeling the urge to get a grip on a golf stick and try his luck on the course again, after having been barred for several months from that form of outdoor exercise and supreme enjoyment.

State of the weather Saturday morning augured well for the possibility of an early resumption of the sport, but the forecast held out prospect of increasing warmth.

In fact, 'twill be exactly the opposite, after tonight.

Increasing cloudiness and rain late tonight, followed by rain late tonight or Sunday. Colder Sunday afternoon in west and north positions. Cold wave Sunday night.

Someone is always throwing a monkey wrench into the gears of the joy of living machine, it seems, and the weatherman is not the least guilty. However, there's no way to remedy it, no matter how one may kick. So long as cold blasts blow just grin and bear it.

There's consolation in the assurance that springlike conditions will prevail sometime—soon.

How to Avoid Flu

Avoid the influenza-pneumonia by obeying these rules:

Keep out of the sickroom as much as possible.

Keep your children dry and warm.

Avoid those who cough or sneeze.

Keep the nose well greased with an ointment containing a germicide.

If you cough or sneeze, use your handkerchief.

Prevent colds, as a cold today may lead to influenza tomorrow. Do not overeat or overdrink.

Here is a formula for one of the most successful ointments used during the epidemic of last year. It is a combination of the old-time remedies of turpentine (which for years has been the best home germicide), camphor and menthol. It is called Turpo and is the only turpentine ointment. Turpo is also a good preventive for colds.

Your druggist has a jar for you.

If influenza develops, go to bed and call a doctor.

$400,000,000 IS PAID ON INCOMES

Increase Over Last Year Expected to Reach $27,000,000

DUE TO BUSINESS REVIVAL

Better Conditions Shown in Corporation Returns

WASHINGTON—(United Press.) —Preliminary reports from federal tax collectors indicate that the American people paid slightly in excess of $400,000,000 in income taxes yesterday, treasury officials said today.

The total may reach $420,000,000, which would be $27,000,000 greater than the amount received on the same date last year.

Previous predictions of the treasury were that the payment would amount to $400,000,000.

The tax returns made yesterday call for an annual payment of nearly $1,500,000,000, it was estimated.

BUSINESS REVIVAL

Treasury officials believe that the increase in taxes in the face of reduced rates is a barometer of a healthy business revival that was in progress last year.

Some of the important corporation returns received are said to clearly show better business conditions last year, as compared with 1921, which suffered from the post-war reaction.

In addition to the taxes called for in returns filed yesterday, an additional sum ranging from $100,000 to $200,000,000 probably will be received this year from back taxes. This will be partly offset by tax refunds amounting to from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000.

The exact amount of the taxes received yesterday will not be known for several days, as great heaps of returns, filed at the eleventh hour, were in the collector's office this morning.

The government already has paid out of yesterday's tax receipts, as certificates of indebtedness totalling $265,000,000 due on March 15.

To avoid congestion in our office and the necessity of our customers having to wait in line for long periods when paying bills, we have divided the City into three districts, and hereafter bills will be sent out on the 10th, 20th and 30th of each month.

Those in the district sent out on the 10th are payable on or before the 20th of the current month. The district sent out on the 20th are payable on or before the 30th of the current month, and the district sent out on the 30th of the current month are payable on or before the 10th of the month following.

This will mean that customers in the first and second districts will pay two bills in the month of March, covering two entirely different periods, the second payment under the old billing method which would not have been paid until the 10th of the month following, will now be due on the 20th and 30th of the current month respectively, and on the same date on each subsequent month.

If this is not perfectly clear to any customer, ask anyone in our office for a personal explanation.

NO CLUES ARE FOUND BY DELPHOS POLICE IN ATTACK ON DECOURCEY

Reenactment of an assault on an unidentified man perpetrated on William J. Decoursey, 28, employee of the Delphos Bending company, early Thursday morning as he was returning from work, awaits his recovery.

Chief of Police H. A. Kehres declared Saturday he will have Decoursey go over the ground with him as soon as he recovers sufficiently.

Decoursey is unable to give an accurate description of the attack because of darkness and the footpad's sudden appearance behind him as he was walking to his home on N. Washington-st. He is able to tell how he managed to reach his place of residence, located about six blocks from the scene of the attack.

As near as he can tell, Decoursey says, the assault was committed between Second and Third-sts on Washington-st.

Police adhere to the belief that Decoursey was attacked by a gang of wanderers who saw in the factory worker a chance to obtain money for something to eat. This is borne out police say, because Decoursey's watch was disregarded and two dollars in bills taken from him.

Decoursey had partially recovered from a wound inflicted on his mouth. Both lips were split and several teeth knocked out.

CHICAGO — The mutilated body found buried in the snow near Geneva, Ill., a month ago, was positively identified today as that of Edward McBride, gunman, bootlegger and escaped convict.

Authorities believe friends of Edward Morris, now serving a life sentence for the murder of Police-man Edward Mullin, may have killed McBride. Morris was convicted when his former friend McBride squealed and turned state's evidence.

SQUANDERED IN SPECULATION

All Lost in Grain Market Drop Prisoner Says

CEDAR RAPIDS — (United Press)

—E. H. Reimers, former manager of the Kevé Lumber Company here, today confessed squandering $100,000 of the concern's money in speculation, officials announced.

Reimers was arrested while in hiding at a local hotel under an assumed name.

After being questioned for three hours the prisoner broke down and admitted, authorities announced, that he was able to cover up the thefts.

"I lost all of my personal funds by speculation in the grain market," Reimers' alleged confession stated. "In a final effort to make a big cleanup, I threw more than $100,000 of the company's money into the pot. The market dropped and in a day I had lost all."

Reimers' alleged thefts were discovered a week ago when he disappeared. He turned to Cedar Rapids last night, registering at a hotel under the name of "Wilson."

The Kevé company, one of the largest in the midwest, operates branches in 17 cities of as many states.

MRS. COFFMAN ILL SEVEN YEARS

Saved from an Operation by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sidell, Ill. — "I was a nervous wreck. I was suffering from a pain in my left side, which was almost unbearable, and I could not even let the bed clothing rest on my body at night. I had been sick for seven years, but not so bad until the last eighteen months, and had become so run-down that I cared for nobody, and would rather have died than live. I couldn't do my work without help, and the doctors told me that an operation was all there was left. I would not consent to that, so my husband brought me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and begged me to take it. I have taken fourteen bottles of it and I feel ten years younger. Life is full of hope. I do all my housework and had a large garden this year. I never will be without the Vegetable Compound in the house, and when my little girls reach womanhood I intend to teach them to take it. I am too busy to tell some suffering sister of my help, and you can use my name and letter to spread the good news of Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine."

—Mrs. I. M. COFFMAN, R.B.2, Sidell, Ill.

JACKSON MAY CONTEST REMOVAL AS MEMBER OF LEGION TRUSTEE BOARD

Judge Emmett J. Jackson, who was deposed as a member of the board of trustee of the American Legion Friday night, may resist the action. It was learned Saturday.

By-laws of the post provide that no public officer can hold an elective office in the Legion. Jackson may ask a reconsideration when the post meets March 23 to select a new trustee to fill the vacancy. Jackson has been appointed executive chairman.

Drive for new members has netted more than 50 to date. Bob Shaw, chairman, reported. A canvass of business houses of the city is to be made soon by a flying squadron of Legionnaires, who will solicit new members.

The American Legion will put a baseball team in the industrial league during the coming summer, the members decided.

No one other than Legion members will be permitted to play on the team. Uniforms for the team are to be obtained in the near future.

LIMA BAKERS TO ATTEND MEETING AT ST. MARYS

State legislation affecting the baking industry will be examined by the Northwestern Ohio Bakers' association at St. Marys, March 25. Fifty per cent of the bakers of Lima will attend, it is stated.

The meeting of the bakers is usually held at the Lima club, but this month's meeting will take place at the Fountain hotel at St. Marys.

The State bread law, prohibiting bakers from taking back or refunding money for stale bread, is one matter that will be discussed, it was said. The weight law, requiring bakers to stamp the weight of the bread on each loaf, will also be discussed.

The bakers will ask that the laws be either enforced or repealed, John C. Knass, secretary, said. Most of the bakers favor the laws, but the state never appropriated funds for enforcement.

W. E. Baxter, Allen-co representative and Sam F. Hunt, Shelby-co representative, have been invited to attend the meeting and take part in the discussion.

One hundred and twenty bakers in eleven counties are members of the association. Carl Renz of Lima is president.

VERDICT IN SHOE SUIT; BARRON COLLIER LOSES

VETERAN TRACKMEN SHOW HEELS TO YOUNGSTERS

(By JACKSON V. SCHOLZ)
NEW YORK — The past indoor track season has been a series of strenuous events for the fan and it is not without a feeling of relief that he welcomes the short period of calm between seasons which will give him an opportunity to relax a bit and familiarize himself with some of the new records and new names appearing in the list of stars. The former promises to be the more difficult task of the two, because one of the most outstanding features of the past season is the fact that the burden of establishing the new records has been borne to a large extent upon the shoulders of the old timers who refuse to hang up their old shoes and give the kids a chance.

John Ray, of course, has been the big noise as usual, and in contributing even more than his yearly quota of new times, still reigns supreme upon middle distance men.

despite his historic defeat at the hands of Willie Ritola, the flying Finn, holder of the three-mile indoor and outdoor record.

Ritola, by the way, is the most illustrious of the newcomers and claims without an argument the most meteoric rise to fame of any athletic phenom.

Loren Muchison is another former Olympic man who has been performing thruout the season at the top of his form and showed a shameful disrespect for the long standing record in the 60-yard dash which he remodeled to suit himself.

Jimmy Connolly is another of the veterans who refuses to give way to new talent and even when he hangs up a new time in the two-thirds mile the man who pushed him to his limit, was Ray Watson, an Olympic teammate.

ALL-STARS RETAIN AMATEUR STATUS

Five Lima high school basketball stars, who lost to the Wapakoneta Reds Friday night by a score of 38 to 13, will not be allowed to represent their schools in athletic competition in the future.

This statement was made Saturday morning by C. K. Graham, South High faculty manager of athletics, who stated the lads were aware of this fact before starting the game.

DUBLIN EXCITED BY BIG FIGHT

(By GEORGE MACDONAGH)
DUBLIN — With the help of the Irish army, Battling Siki, the world's light-heavyweight champion, and Mike McGuire, the champion of Erin, will battle 20 rounds here tonight for the title.

Agents in plain clothes and uniformed free staters mixed with the crowd and looked for concealed weapons.

DELPHOS ST. JOHNS LOSES FINALE TO OTTAWA

Before a huge crowd in the armory at Ottawa Friday night, St. John's high school of Delphos lost the final encounter of the season, bringing its record to 20 victories and four defeats. The score was 45 to 21.

Ulm and Shelby each made half rising shots in this manner. Ottawa had sweet revenge for a 38-31 defeat dealt out January 30 at Delphos.

WALTER JOHNSON IS UNLUCKY

Walter Johnson, famous pitcher of the Washington Americans, has had more than his share of tough luck during the last four or five years.

Northwestern Wins

RICKARD LIKELY TO BLOCK FIRPO-DEMPEY FIGHT

NEW YORK — The $750,000 offered to have been made to Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion by Argentine promoters for a title match with Luis Angel Firpo, in Buenos Aires next November, is valueless, Tex Rickard, Madison Square Garden promoter, declared today.

and right now I see no prospect of going outside the United States. He probably will meet the winner of the Jos Williams-Floyd Johnson bout in May and if again successful perhaps one other opponent before he will be ready to challenge Dempsey.

The Wisconsin Duxson team was the individual star. It turned in games of 990, 962 and 937 for a total of 2889, which put them far ahead of the field.

MALONE WINS OVER O'DOWD

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Jack Malone, of St. Paul, who in several states is recognized as middleweight boxing champion of the world, today had advanced another step in his claim for championship honors as a result of his knockout victory last night over Mike O'Dowd, St. Paul's fighting "Harb."

BENDER IS COACH

ANNAPOLIS — Chief Bender, former pitching star of the Philadelphia Athletics, started work here today with the pitching candidates of the Navy squad. He will handle the midshipmen for two weeks.

RECORDS BROKEN

LOS ANGELES — R. C. (CHIT) Durant, automobile race driver, had the satisfaction of knowing today that he had broken all the world's records from five to fifty miles, both competitive and non-competitive, in tests at the Los Angeles Speedway under the sanction and supervision of the contest board of the American Automobile Association yesterday.

TRAINING CAMP BRIEFS

SAN ANTONIO — With rookies taking the place of Eddie Collins and Ernie Johnson, the Chicago White Sox blew into town Saturday to start a series of exhibition games with the New York Giants. "Wait 'til you see Willie Kamm," the Sox said. "Wait 'til you see Jimmy O'Connell," the Giants replied.

NEW ORLEANS — Miller Huggins will put his Yankee regulars thru their first official work out here Saturday, when the Yankees play the New Orleans team. "All our boys are in good shape and the only thing they need is some real practice," Huggins said.

CLEVELAND, Fla. — Speaking of his two holdouts, Charley Ebbets, president of the Brooklyn Robins, said he would not give Zack Wheat or Andy Hih the money they wanted and if they didn't agree to terms soon they were thru with baseball. "They can't run my club and dictate to me," he said.

TAMPA, Fla. — The Senators play their first exhibition game here today with the Boston Braves. Due to the stick work of Fiske, St. Joseph, Mo., recruit and Joey Evans, former Cleveland Indian, the Yankees beat the regulars again Friday, 1 to 0.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Tris Speaker does everything and even more than he asks his players to do. But it was a new stunt even for him when he assumed the role of catcher. It happened that all the regulars were warming up pitchers as Speaker grabbed a mitt and got busy.

ORLANDO, Fla. — Red coils conquered the Veterans a second time Friday when they won an abbreviated game 8 to 6. The pitching of Jim Roberts, Detroit cast off, featured.

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Rain and wet grounds prevented the Detroit Tigers from participating in a practice game Friday but Manager Cobb put his infielders thru a lengthy drill in breaking up hits and run plays and the double steal. Cobb is particularly pleased with the showing of Derrill Pratt, second baseman who arrived last Monday.

LOS ANGELES, Calif. — The Cubs defeated the Angels 2 to 2 in 10 innings.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Connie Mack's players have finished their preliminary training steps and from now until the championship race starts the Athletics will play rival teams in exhibition games.

The Poetic Romance that Made Hollywood Gasp

How a Famous Sculptor and the Ideal Model He Rescued from the Gutters of Paris Found the Happy Ending to a Situation Which No Playwright Had Ever Dared to Anticipate

A Charming Camera Study of Yvonne, the Model Whom Sculptor Gardelle Rescued in Babyhood from the Paris Slums, Adopted, Lost, Regained and Now Has Married.

Yvonne Posing for Her Sculptor Husband in Their Los Angeles Studio.

darkyard minstrels. He was fascinated by the child. Day after day he worked with her, and day by day he grew to love her more. When he was about to return to America he found that she had so wrapped herself around his heart that he couldn't leave her.

He made a proposition to the child's guardians and virtually bought her from them. Before he left France he legally adopted her, naming her Yvonne Gardelle. She was less than four years old. He brought her to New York and later to California. She continued to be his model. He has never had any other. While she was a child he sculptured little girls; when she grew, his subjects grew with her—always Yvonne was his sole model, and all his works through twenty years, ranged in order, would be a motion picture in marble of her growth from babyhood to matured womanly beauty.

The affection between them had always been without a cloud. Those who knew them most intimately marveled at the devotion of the artist father and his model daughter. He never discussed her mother and turned queries off with non-committal answers. The girl, herself, had long since learned that questions on the subject were not welcome, and never raised them.

In Hollywood, as Yvonne grew lovelier and lovelier, the sculptor guarded her against any possible encroachments of undesirable influences. She was known as "the perfect girl" in face and figure, and was hounded with the approaches of flirts as well as legitimate offers from picture producers and theatrical managers.

She appeared in several films—strangely enough, "The Prince Chap" was one of them—but Gardelle never allowed her to advance far enough in the profession to become a regular actress. He told her it was not his wish that she become an actress, and she acceded to his decision.

But, "on location" with one of the movie troupes, she met a youth named Brooks. She was taken with his good looks and his engaging manner, and within a month ran away with him.

Just what their brief married life was has never been made known beyond the charges officially entered in her divorce suit, where she alleged that her husband was a pickpocket with a record, had grossly deceived her, and had caused her great anguish. The divorce was granted. Shortly afterward came the startling news of her marriage to Gardelle, whom all of her acquaintances—and she, herself, it now develops—had thought her real father. They had eloped to Nevada. They are living in Hollywood now.

Gardelle is a prosperous and accepted sculptor again. During her absence with Brooks he had done no work.

"I couldn't," he said. "All my art, all my visualization of beauty is in Yvonne. I couldn't be untrue to it—to her."

"I loved her as a strange baby first, because she was the most infinitely lovely being I have ever beheld. She grew up to be my child, and I loved her for her sweet soul, too, but her beauty kept pace with her mental and spiritual development through the years, too."

"I began to understand those romantic stories of men who in time grew to love their warms with another, a new adoration. But our relations had been so ethereally and transcendently sweet that I could not find it within me to disturb them, even for the glorious and perhaps even greater love that was gnawing at my heart."

"It seemed to me at times that I could no longer repress my increasing desire to crush her in my arms, to kiss her not as a father kisses his child, to declare my love as a man to her as a woman. But I fought it off—no one will ever dream what a fight it was."

"And then came that dark, disastrous, crushing anti-climax to our poetic relations!"

"I thought I would go mad. I threw away my chisel and I walked the roads; in the still hours of the California nights I would stand at the edge of the great Pacific and throw my hands on high and scream against the unfeeling fate that had torn from me at once the angel of two divine loves—my daughter and my sweetheart!"

"Seldom—maybe never—has a man loved as I had, for to me was given all the inexpressible glory of worshipping one lovely girl with the hallowed affection of a father and the burning urge of a lover. And when I lost her, the agony was as bitter as the ecstasy had been sweet; the fall was as far as the joy had been high."

"I had made the doubly extreme sacrifice, and now had been doubly bereft. When my Yvonne came back and sobbed upon my breast the story of her ruined romance, I could hold out no longer."

"Kind kismet, through the agency of a cruel disappointment to her, has brought me back my child, my woman!"

"And as soon as she could be freed we were married. And we are as happy as we had been through the score of years since first I carried her to my studio in France—happier, if that is possible."

"She is to me the embodiment of absolute perfection. Her body, her mind, her soul—all are without a blemish."

Hollywood gasped over the denouement. Accustomed to "rough stuff" and frivolous attitudes toward marriage and love, glutted with all the unceasing bandying of romantic stories as scenarios, and used to dissecting every new squirm of relations between the sexes as screen material, this real-life love-story, occurring within the very midst of the blase and iconoclastic picture colony, has been a new and exhilarating topic over the teacups—and the cocktail.

The curious intruders, in truth, drove the Gardelles out of Hollywood to a retreat in Northern California for a honeymoon. They have returned now that the first fervor of the gossip has diminished.

Above his studio on Santa Monica Boulevard, the Prince Chap-Daddy Longlegs lives with his model daughter-wife. The rage of baby girl of the Paris slums is now twenty-four years old, and the gray of middle age edges the temples of the sculptor.

They live a routine life—so many hours in the studio, so many at home, so many outdoors, so many reading, etc. Mrs. Gardelle is an athlete. She rides like an Indian, shoots like a cowboy, can lift 200 pounds on one hand without breathing hard, swims miles along the beach, and yet is girlish and not "knotty" of physique.

She poses in the nude before her husband just as naively as she did when as a child she thought him her father. She still calls him "daddy"—but that, they say, is not unique in Hollywood.

LOS ANGELES.

ROMANCE, drama—even history—have familiarized the story of the girl who grew up and married her foster-father.

"The Prince Chap," "The Professor's Romance," "Daddy Longlegs" and many other famous play-tales have used this plot and found it as appealing as the Cinderella formula.

Time and again the newspapers have published true incidents of the same sort and millions have smiled and said, "Isn't that touching?"

But now comes one with a twist that no dramatist, no scenario dreamer, no novelist ever thought of. And it comes from the source that yields the greatest of all stories—fact. The truth need not stand by established rules of dramatics; it need not pass censorship before commercial producers or managers; it just happens, and is inspired sometimes by heroism and romanticism so extreme that the imagination might never conceive a parallel instance.

This is the story of a girl and the man who had adopted and reared her—reared her "according to the book" to believe that he was her father. And now he has married her—

BUT:

He did not marry

her when she had reached young womanhood; when first he began to realize that she was no longer a child; when propinquity had urged him more and more to declare himself to the girl because she had brought about within him an urge foreign to the paternal devotion that he had so long given her.

Carlton Gardelle, bachelor, sculptor, and Yvonne Gardelle, his foster-daughter and model (could a scenario ask for a more romantic situation?), were married in Hollywood, more famous for its unenviable complexes than for its beatific matrimonial loves, after the girl had been married to another man, had come back to him heart-broken and disillusioned—back to her "daddy" for comfort and sanctuary.

She babbled out the tragic details of her sorry betrayal by a man who had married her in the guise of a decent citizen, and who turned out to be a thief and a reprobate; who had deceived and mistreated her.

The sculptor raised her in his arms, kissed her, and with a thump of his fist on the table, cried:

"We will divorce the blackguard—and I'll marry you myself!"

The girl disengaged herself slowly and looked at him with puzzled eyes.

"Why—what are you saying, daddy?" she asked.

"I am not your daddy," he told her.

He took her on his knee and related to her the tale of an American-born Frenchman from Michigan, studying sculpture in Paris, on the ragged edge of Montmartre. He needed a child model and engaged a beautiful, big-eyed orphan, who was being kept by some Italian beggars who trained youngsters to become mendicants and

Wild Romances of Oklahoma's Millionaire Indian Beauty

Why Paris Hats, Gowns and a Million Dollar Palace Couldn't Stop the Oil-Well Princess from Settling Her Love Affairs Like Her Primitive Ancestors Did

THERE is romance still in the "wild and woolly west" and Allie Daney is its heroine. Allie is nineteen, beautiful, a Choctaw princess and worth $5,000,000. But she doesn't wear wampum and ride a pinto pony—often. She gets her hats from Paris and her motors from Detroit, and instead of buffaloes and war whoops, the high spots of her career include three husbands, a convent elopement, gushing oil wells, million-dollar mansions, automobile smashups, domestic squabbles, accusations, horse-whipping the "other woman," divorce suits and arrest on charges of drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

Only a few years ago Allie was just a little papoose on an Indian reservation in Oklahoma. In her cradle she seemed no different from Pocahontas or Minnehaha. But it was Allie's fate to be an Indian maiden in the twentieth century instead of in 1620. Oil was discovered in Oklahoma and Allie, like hundreds of other Indians, became rich overnight.

To-day Allie Daney owns fourteen oil wells, spouting a constant stream of gold into her $2,000 platinum mesh bag, and holds leases on lands that may double and triple her fortune to-morrow. Also, she is the defendant in damage suits totaling $100,000, and the charges in these suits reveal a career as picturesque, in its modern setting, as any Laughing Water's in Hiawatha's time.

According to one suit against Allie Daney, she was only fourteen when she eloped from a convent at Fort Smith, Arkansas, with her first husband, a youth named Lon Burton, who was a plumber's assistant.

Burton came to the convent to fix a broken pipe. He saw the Choctaw girl and loved her. For he, too, was an Indian. Already Allie had made two unsuccessful attempts to escape from the convent. One morning a rope of knotted sheets and blankets dangling from the window of her room told mutely of her final triumph. Burton was missing from the town. The convent authorities drew quick and correct conclusions.

The Indian lovers had driven to Van Buren, Arkansas, in a sifter. There they were married, fleeing immediately for a primitive Indian honeymoon in the hills. Allie's guardian, Asa Thomas, started an ancient proceeding, but the Indian Agency officials, on Allie's plea, sanctioned the marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Burton arrived in Muskogee, and with a fat slice of Allie's millions built an imposing residence in the city's swankiest suburb.

The Burtons gave a housewarming that made Muskogee gasp. The caterer's bill alone was said to mount into several thousands. And this was but the first of a series of glittering entertainments. Neighbors, however, declared there was more luxury than happiness in the Burton household. One night they were roused by revolver shots. Neighbors said later they saw Mrs. Burton on the front porch, blazing away at a rapidly retreating figure. Her husband soon afterward enlisted and went to France.

Court records show that Allie Daney Burton's second marriage was performed while she was still "on the books" as Burton's wife. It is said she eloped the second time with a lieutenant in the United States Army, and that Burton, returning to the States, learned they were honeymooning in the hills where he had taken his convent bride only a few years before. The Indian Agency officials were asked to annul the second marriage on the ground that it was bigamous. They did. Allie returned to her first husband and they left Muskogee on a "grand tour" of America.

For a time the million-dollar princess dropped out of the limelight. And then two suits were filed simultaneously in the Oklahoma courts. One, sponsored by Burton, charged that Allie had adopted a child. He sought to prevent her making the adoption legal. The other suit alleged that the Choctaw beauty mistreated the baby. The plaintiff asked $25,000 damages.

Allie's retort to this was to divorce Burton. She named Mrs. Pearl Repner as co-respondent. Mrs. Repner went to law herself. She sued Allie for $50,000 and got a verdict for $1,000 and costs. According to her charges, Allie was so hot-tempered that she trailed Burton to Mrs. Repner's home at midnight and attacked the lady with fist and fingernail.

Mrs. Billie McCullough, another friend of Burton's, cited Allie for a similar cause. She said the Indian girl, abetted by a woman chum, induced her into an automobile, drove her to a lonely glade in the woods, and there lashed her with a blacksnake whip until blood gushed from her back. She asked $25,000 of Allie's millions.

Allie, divorced from Burton and her second marriage annulled, kept "open house" for her friends at the Muskogee mansion. Her oil wells were still streaming more money than she possibly could spend, and the "parties" she gave became the talk of the entire State.

At one of these a guest was Sanford W. Myers, a hotel clerk in Muskogee. Last August Myers married the Indian heiress at Carthage, Missouri. They returned to Muskogee after the honeymoon, and it was said by intimates of Allie that she was planning to "settle down."

It was only a few weeks later that neighbors were wakened, as once before, by a volley of shots. Myers was seen fleeing through the night, half clad. This time they telephoned the police. They discovered Allie half dressed on the floor of her bathroom, with a bullet wound in her side. She declared at the hospital that she had shot herself accidentally. But she admitted she and her new husband had quarreled. He accused her of reviving her friendship with Burton, her first husband.

"They're reconciled!" was the next news Muskogee had of the pair. And scarcely was this rumor abroad than it was followed by another: "They're battling again!"

Both rumors had foundation. The last one is told in detail in the latest records of Muskogee's police headquarters and city hospital.

According to these accounts, Allie went to an afternoon tea where something more than salad was served. She reached home at twilight, exuberant. Her husband was not in the same mood. He said as much, he backed it up by insisting that Allie cool down. Allie refused to cool. She became more heated than ever; she tossed her Paris hat into a corner, rolled up the sleeves of her $1,000 frock, and, according to Myers, he lost consciousness before he knew what struck him.

A patrol wagon arrived in front of "Choctaw Palace," as Muskogee called Allie's residence, when somebody informed the police that Allie was doing a primitive war dance on the lawn of her home. Officers shoed Allie inside. Internes took charge of the husband. The Indian girl oil queen had to put up a cash bond for her appearance in court next day.

But Allie never got to court. The police say, when the ambulance took her husband away, she had an attack of remorse. Entering her racing car she drove to the hospital, demanded to be allowed to see him and cried over his cot. He forgave her.

Allie's spirits went to "high" again. So did her imported speedster on its way home. Three wrecked automobiles, in-

What the Branded Flapper Told Under the Third Degree

The Left Arm of Pretty Rosella Garrison Showing the "Butterfly" Cross Brand Which Even Third Degree Police Method* Couldn't Trap Her Into Admitting Was Self-Inflicted.

I DID IT FOR A GIRL IN NEW YORK. SHE'S AN ACTRESS, AND IS PAYING ME TO DO IT SHE IS MAD BECAUSE YOU ARE PRETTY. SHE TOLD ME IF I WOULD PUT THE BRAND ON YOUR FACE SHE WOULD PAY ME $100. BUT YOU ARE TOO PRETTY TO SPOIL SO I AM PUTTING IT ON YOUR ARM. BUTTERFLY

The "Butterfly" Cross Brand on Rosella Garrison's Left Arm, Which Even Third Degree Police Method* Couldn't Trap Her Into Admitting Was Self-Inflicted.

It Was a Lurid Tale of Love, Jealousy, Revenge— but the Sceptical Inquisitors

Couldn't Make Her Eat a Word of It

The combined quizzing of her mother, her father, psychoanalysts, the chief of police and two La Porte police officials, trained in every twist and turn of the "third degree," could not make the story of little Rosella Garrison.

Rosella is the fifteen-year-old Indiana daughter who is puzzling the psychopaths and psychiatrists of the country, because in the face of their diagnosis that she is the product of a neurotic, stage-struck, movie-fed, adolescent urge for revenge, she repeats it before the most cunning cross-fire of questions with an ingenuous felicity that amazes the specialists.

When her sisters returned from school one morning to find Rosella in a dazed faint on the floor, with a raw, fresh burn flaming on her left forearm; and when Rosella, revived, poured out a hysterical account of a boy sweetheart, a jealous actress rival, a mysterious rapping while she was alone in the house, arms seized by a tiger's grip, stabbing pain, the snarl of snarled teeth, then darkness—police and detectives exchanged winks.

And when, hours later, a mysterious note turned up on the premises, purporting to be from Rosella's assailant, but written on an envelope identified as belonging to the Garisons, the search for the murderer was postponed in favor of a conference of kinfolk and authorities.

An expert in neuroses was called. After hearing the case stated, he smiled and nodded wisely. Of course, he hesitated to accuse Mr. and Mrs. Garrison's daughter of fibbing, but their description of her personality and her hobbies, viewed in the light of her age and his experience with daughters of other parents and authentic medical records, led him to but one conclusion.

Here, to begin with, was a girl of a very impressionable period—a stage of dreams and strange fancies, frequently morbid, with such matters as love and mystery and revenge, loom large in minds tortured in the world's ways only vicariously.

Fifteen-year-old Rosella was an omnivorous reader. She read novels and romances. She read the newspapers. And the newspapers had been full of headlines about love feuds and broken hearts and hooded hands that took women out and horsewhipped them and carved fiery crosses on their foreheads.

Rosella was a movie fan, wasn't she? She cut pictures of handsome leading men and beautiful ingenues out of the screen magazines. She bobbed her hair. She signed to use rouge and a lipstick. Hadn't she confessed to her sister that she yearned to be a movie star herself? Why, all one needed was to get her picture in the papers! Then an enthusiastic director would arrive on the next train, waving million-dollar contracts.

The specialists knew of dozens of cases where girls from twelve to fifteen had told amazing stories later proven to be mere figments of their imaginations. Only a year ago the country was shocked by the suicide on an Easter morning of the Mars Hill, Maine, minister, who had been accused by a thirteen-year-old girl. Only after his death did the weeping, terrified child confess she had "made up" the details which brought about the aged clergyman's ostracism, brooding and self-destruction.

"Leave this to me," the chief of police advised Rosella's parents. "Your daughter hasn't done any harm, unless it's to herself, but we must have the truth out of her. My men and I are used to questioning witnesses we suspect of hiding the real facts. You haven't been able to shake her story. Our methods may be more successful."

And so slender, bobbed-haired, big-eyed Rosella, her left arm still raw and feverish, went in to confront the men who had wrung confessions of guilt from murderers, bank robbers, safe blowers, petty sneak thieves, shoplifters, bootleggers, embezzlers and all the scum and scum and higher-ups of a city's underworld.

For more than two hours they grilled her, covering every inch of ground to discover some possible discrepancy in her story, endeavoring by verbal traps and sudden thrusts of doubt and accusation to break down her simple replies.

Question—You were alone in the house when this thing happened?

Answer—Yes; my mother had gone to town to do some shopping and my two little sisters were at school.

Q.—What were you doing?

A.—Eating breakfast.

Q.—When did you first know that somebody was at the door?

A.—Why, when he knocked.

Q.—Oh, he knocked, did he?

A.—Yes; I didn't notice it at first—it was kind of soft and I was thinking about a picture I'd seen the day before. Then I thought, "Why, that's somebody at the door!" And I went to open it.

Q.—Now tell us as accurately as you can exactly what happened.

A.—Why, when I took hold of the knob to open the door I could see through the glass that it was a man. But he had his back to me so I couldn't see his face. As I pulled the door open he whirled around quick. He had on a mask. I think it was a handkerchief. It was tied about the lower half of his face, from the nose down.

Q.—Wait a minute—his description!

A.—Well, he was medium tall, about five feet eight, I guess. He had brown eyes. I couldn't tell the color of his hair because he wore a black felt hat pulled down over his forehead. His suit was black, too, as nearly as I can remember. He had on black patent-leather shoes, I think. If I hadn't been so frightened by the mask I would have thought he was a well-dressed fellow.

Q.—What happened then?

A.—He grabbed me, I yelled, and he stuck one hand over my mouth. While I struggled with him he was trying to get something out of his coat pocket. I got just a glimpse of it—burning hot—it looked like a rubber stamp.

Q.—How could a man carry a red-hot iron in his pocket?

A.—You can search me! It was funny, wasn't it? Maybe he had it attached to an electrical battery or something.

Q.—Hum! Go on.

A.—I don't remember much else. He was trying to burn my face with that thing and I was fighting him off. He got so close I could feel how hot it was. Then, when he almost had me overpowered, he jerked my head back and looked me in the eyes and suddenly burned my arm instead.

Q.—Why didn't he burn your face?

A.—(Giggles)—Say, would you burn my face? That would be a shame now, wouldn't it? He answered that question in the note he left.

Q.—We'll get to that. But, first, tell us how your sisters happened to find you in a chair when all this happened at the door?

A.—How can I tell you that? I didn't know anything from the time I felt that terrible burn on my arm till they woke me up. Maybe I was there. He looked awfully strong!

Q.—He looked strong? Didn't you feel his strength when you fought him?

A.—I should say I did! But he could look strong and be strong, too, couldn't he?

Q.—Possibly. Now about this note. Suppose I read it aloud. "I did it for a girl in New York. She is an actress and is paying me to do it. She is mad because you are pretty, and she told me if I would put it on your face she would pay me $100. I saw you were pretty, so I put on your arm a butterfly." Whose writing is this?

A.—I don't know. I never saw it before.

Q.—Isn't this envelope one like your mother uses?

A.—Let me see! Yes, I think it is. But what's funny about that? He probably didn't carry stationery around with him on his branding parties. After he put that mark on me he picked up the first thing in sight to write his note on. Don't you think so?

Q.—Never mind what I think. Where did you find this note?

A.—Under the cover on that little stand.

A.—Because my arm was burned. I went to the doctor's. Why didn't you find it before?

A.—That's exactly what we don't understand. But never mind. If this note is genuine, have you any idea who the girl is he mentions?

Q.—I certainly have. It was ——. She used to live here and she was crazy about the same boy I was. Then she went on the stage and he wouldn't have anything to do with her any more. He was crazy about me. She threatened me several times. Last May a man tried to seize me at Division and Woodward streets, and when I ran he shouted, "I'll get you yet! If you want to know the truth about this, why don't you find that girl?"

Q.—Where is she now?

A.—I'm not sure. The last I heard she was with a musical show in Chicago.

Q.—Are you aware that, though this attack was in broad daylight, none of your neighbors saw this man? Yet you say you screamed.

A.—I'm not responsible for what the neighbors see or don't see. Our two little dogs saw him. When he grabbed me at the door they began barking, and one of them ran up and caught him in the leg. He kicked the dog off.

Q.—Hold out your left arm, Miss Garrison. Now take your right arm and hold it over the burned place. Frankly, I want to see if the cross on your left arm could have been made by a hot poker or some other implement in your right hand.

A.—You think I did it myself, huh? Well, you're welcome to think so! It does look like I might have held something the way you say, doesn't it? But if you think I've got the nerve to burn myself you don't know me! And I would have had to burn myself twice—one line crossing the other—unless I'd had the sort of thing that man had. He did have it, too! Say, do you think I could burn one mark with a poker or a pin, and then grit my teeth and burn the other one? Say, do you?

Q.—We are only trying to look into every angle of this affair. Come, now, tell us frankly, Miss Garrison—didn't you do this yourself as a sort of publicity stunt to get into the movies?

A.—You're dumb! Do you think it would help me in the movies to give an ugly mark like that on my arm?

It would take many pages to give the full report of Rosella Garrison's "third degree." But the police admit that, so far as breaking down her story was concerned, it was a failure. With all the testimony of medical and official experience against her, the "branded flapper" never slipped a cog in her facts or scenario—whatever she really told.

A Royal Honeymoon in Macbeth's Haunted Castle

Fancy the Young Duke of York Confronted Suddenly by the Nameless Horror That Overshadows the Historic Home of His Promised Bride and Is Now Declared to Have Been Seen Again!

One of the Living Holders of the Earls of Strathmore's Secret, Lord Glamis, Eldest Brother of Lady Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon.

the Strathmores and wouldn't for the world have them think she had betrayed their confidence.

Soon after she arrived in England last Summer, and before she met Lord and Lady Strathmore, she heard from the lips of other friends in London the legend of Glamis Castle, as it has been told around Scottish firesides and incorporated into Scottish folk-lore since the days of sorrow and shame.

Glamis Castle, a ruin of granite and masonry, stands on a high steep near the Scottish border in the heart of a country noted for its fine hunting and fishing. It is so old and has been made over so many times that it has scores of rooms with crypts and dungeons and secret passageways and hidden chambers and all the other attributes of feudalism and mystery. Here, according to Scottish history the ruling Ogilvies were imprisoned and done to death in the old days of border wars. Here the Thane of Cawdor murdered Duncan in the year 1040, and Lady Macbeth stained her lily hands in the blood of Duncan's grooms.

Here in 1337, old documents say, the young widow of the fifth Earl of Strathmore was burned publicly as a witch. And here, soon afterward, as though in punishment for that fatal crime, began the stories of the "frog-man," whose presence is said to cause the Strathmore family to this day.

No one, unless he be a Strathmore, is supposed to have seen the "frog-man," but that the ghost of Glamis is said even by Scotland's lairds to be a fact that no ladies came forward when the castle was offered for sale at bargain prices during the war, and that no inquiries were made when failing to sell, the Earl of Strathmore tried to lease it.

The present Earl's son, Lord Glamis, and perhaps his daughter, Lady Elizabeth, are the only people in a position to say how much of the Glamis legend has any basis in fact and how much a sheer fancy, inspired by the superstitious stories of the Scotch peasantry.

And that is the queerest part of the story. For none of the Strathmores will talk about the legend at all. Their friends say the secret is so hallowed down from father to son for many generations, to any one who would reveal it to any one else.

Only now and again some strange sign has appeared that there actually is a secret which the Strathmores cherish as they do their good name.

Thus the Earl of Strathmore, who was the grandfather of Lady Elizabeth, when asked boldly about the legend by a curious friend, made this stern and startling reply:

"Sir, if you could guess the terrible nature of the mystery, you would go down on your knees and thank God that you were ignorant of it!"

Again, a few years ago, when the present Earl of Strathmore was entertaining a party of friends at dinner, his wine ran low. It so happened that the Earl's trusted cellar-man, who was reported to share the Strathmore secret with him, was not at the castle that night. Refusing to send any other servant on the mission, the Earl rose from the table and remarked that he himself would go to the cellar after more wine.

For a while the guests continued to chatter without any thought of the absent Earl. Then they suddenly realized that he had been gone for nearly thirty minutes. Immediately the story of the Strathmore secret flashed into the minds of every one present. They had all heard that the secret, whatever it was, was hidden in an underground chamber opening off the wine cellar. They feared for the Earl's safety.

Several bolter spirits volunteered to lead a search party. The guests, followed by a train of trembling servants, began the descent of the cellar stairs. Halfway down they were startled by the crash of an iron door. The leaders rushed ahead, then stopped in amazement.

There, staggering away from the door to the wine room, was the Earl of Strathmore. His dinner coat was torn and covered with dust and cobwebs. His eyes stared wildly under towelled hair. And from his shaking hands and from his white face gushed blood from a score of deep scratches.

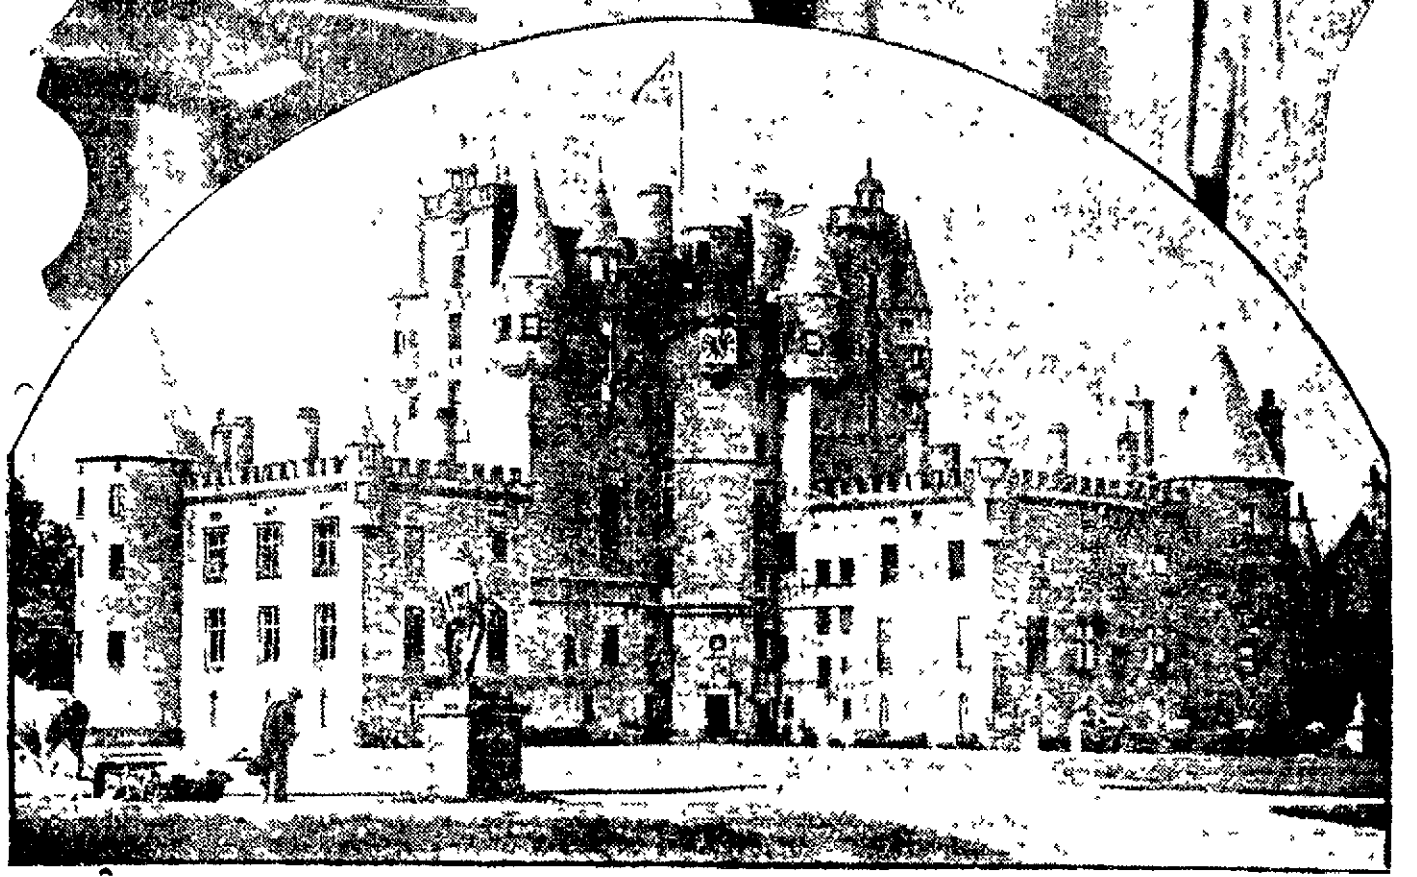

"Go back!" gasped the Earl. "Go back! It is all right."

Nothing more was said that night, but the next morning the Earl assembled all of his guests in the reception hall and announced, "I want to ask you as a personal favor to go at once to your rooms and stay there with locked doors till the bell rings."

Three-quarters of an hour later the castle bell clanged dimly. The guests hurried to the main floor. Everything was just as it had been when they left, save that the Earl smiled as though some great weight had been lifted from his mind. He never referred to his peculiar request again.

There is another story that the grandfather of the present Earl, before he came into his inheritance, determined to discover for himself the secret his father would tell him when he was twenty-one. One night, fortified by several rounds of humpers, he led a party of boon companions along the mysterious corridor which was said to lead to the "haunted chamber."

"He opened the door with a key," wrote one of his guests to a Dr. Lee, "held up the candle, and proceeded to advance into the room. Hardly had he gone a paces when he gave a scream and fell back into our arms in a dead swoon. He was the most horrified man I ever saw, nor could he ever afterward be induced to open his lips on the subject."

Much the same experience was the lot of the American woman who has just returned to New York. This is the story she told to a breathless circle of intimates in a Fifth Avenue drawing room.

"I had been at Glamis for several days. Nothing, of course, was said about the mystery of the castle, as I had been warned by friends never to refer to it if I valued the goodwill of my host and hostess."

"On the last night of our stay the ladies left the men in the smoking room over a last whiskey and soda. Lady Strathmore gave us each a candle, as their old-fashioned custom is, and we started up and

"Lady Strathmore herself was in the lead. Suddenly, as we mounted the first landing, her ladyship looked up, gave a little gasp, and stopped stock still. 'Don't come any farther', she faltered in a frightened whisper, addressing whatever it was that confronted her. 'Terror-stricken, we staggered back. The next moment she turned to us with a shaky smile and said, 'It's all right, you can come along now!'"

"But we had seen what she had seen—a dark, shadowy mass at the head of the stairs. That is the only way I can describe it in the brief glimpse I had of it before it disappeared—a dark, shadowy mass that moved as we looked at it."

"They say, you know," added the narrator, "that the ghost of Glamis is half frog and half man. There is one account that it lives for a hundred years and one is born every century. On the night of a man-frog's death, declare the Scotch peasantry, thousands of frogs from the marshes derbrush toward the castle and form a ring around it, croaking dimly as though they sympathized with the dying agonies of a brother."

"There is still an older legend that the thing which haunts Glamis has the head of a man and the body of a bull. I understand that several guests at Glamis a number of Summers ago tried to fathom the mystery while the Earl and his Lady were out hunting. The butler sent a messenger about to warn the Earl what was conspirators prying into different rooms. He ordered them sternly to leave his house at once and never enter it again."

Such are the stories of the ancient and mysterious castle where Lady Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon soon will become the wife of the second son of the King of England. Does he know the secret of Glamis? And will she tell it to the Duke of York? These are the questions even the most skeptical Britishers are asking.
